Ill —People v Smith, 307 N E 2d 353, 56 Ill 2d 328

The act of a drug user in administering to himself an overdose of a drug sold to him by the accused has been held to be a concurrent rather than an intervening cause of death, so that the drug seller could be convicted of homicide,[86 5] but under some statutes the act of selling a dangerous drug which, when injected with instruments furnished by the seller of the drug, causes the death of the user, does not constitute homicide [86 10]

However, it has also been held that the crime of attempted manslaughter in the first degree does exist. [26.6]

26.6. N Y—People v Spencer, 476 N Y S 2d 735, 124 Misc 2d 89

This is also true of second-degree and third-degree murder [26.10] Also, in at least one jurisdiction, there is no offense of attempted first degree murder, and when a person is charged with attempted murder it is construed as attempted murder in the second degree [26.15]

Proof of any particular kind of robbery not required

In prosecution for murder committed in perpetrating or attempting to perpetrate any robbery

Conn—State v Reid 149 A 2d 698, 146 Conn 227

In a prosecution for first degree murder in the perpetration of a felony the prosecution has the burden of proving a specific intent to commit, the felony.[69.5]

However, it has also been held that it is not incumbent on the prosecution to prove that accused entertained an intent to commit the felony at the time of the killing.[69.10]
